Semana-Hanuman Temple – About 4 km (2.5 mi) from center of town (Gandhi Chowk)

Hemalkasa – Situated in Bhamragarh Block (east side of district), 186 km (116 mi) from Gadchiroli.

Allapalli – Known as Teak City of District, where all forest administration offices and the main marketline, educational and other resources. [citation needed]

Markhanda – A temple dedicated to Lord Shiva on the banks of Wainganaga. There is a big fair on Mahashivratri

BILT (Ashti) – A unit of Ballarour Paper Mills in Ashti.

Gadchiroli lake – located at the centre of the city

Vairagad Fort – Built by the Gond kings as their residence and fortress, near Armori town.

Chaprala Wildlife Sanctuary – About 30 km (30 mi) from district centre.

Five Carved Stones – This sacred place is situated at Patipandav, about 5 kilometer north of Wainganaga. It is believed that the Pandava brothers stayed here during their exile.

Shandreshwar – An ancient temple to Lord Shiva situated to the west of Vairagad village, high on a mound at the confluence of the Khobregadi and Vainlochna rivers. This shrine is a good example of architecture and the carved walls are believed to be from the Hemalkasa period.

Aeshwar Temple – Situated at Vairagad, this temple contains an idol of Aeshwar. It was found during a 1986 excavation. The idol has four hands and is an example of the carvings undertaken by the sculptors of the erstwhile era.

Gadchiroli District

History

In ancient times the region was ruled by the Rashtrakutas, the Chalukyas, the Yadavas of Deogiri and later the Gonds of Gadchiroli. In the 13th century Khandkya Ballal Shah founded Chandrapur and made it his capital. Chandrapur subsequently came under Maratha rule. In 1853 Berar, of which Chandrapur (then called Chanda) was part, was ceded to the British East India Company. In 1854 Chandrapur became an independent district of Berar. In 1905 the British created the tehsil of Gadchiroli by transfer of a zamindari estate from Chandrapur and Bramhapuri. It was part of the Central Provinces until 1956 when, with the reorganisation of the states, Chandrapur was transferred to Bombay state. In 1960, when Maharashtra was created, Chandrapur became a district of the new state. On 26 August 1982 Chandrapur was divided, with Gadchiroli tehsil becoming an independent district. Naxalism is highly prevalent in Gadchiroli, with the guerrilla fighters taking to the hills and dense forests, and it has been designated as part of the Red Corridor. Settlements are being explored by many social workers.

Gadchiroli University

On July 23, 2010 Maharashtra Legislative Assembly passed a unanimous resolution to constitute the Gondwana University, for the area comprising districts of Chandrapur and Gadchiroli. The resolution was moved by then Higher and Technical Education Minister Rajesh Tope. The new university was constituted by issuing notification under sub-section (2) of section 3 of the Maharashtra Universities Act, 1994.[2][3] In 27 September 2011, Gondwana University was carved out of RTMNU, Nagpur.[4] The official inauguration date was delayed until August 2012.[5]
