Skill Ecosystem in India is divergent and vast covering 20 central ministry schemes with varying rate of success. With the introduction of the new Ministry for Skills and entrepreneurship two years ago, an attempt has been made to converge the skill development initiatives by various ministries and align it to the industry demand. The skill ecosystem is in evolving stage and continuously embracing the best practices from the various domestic successful schemes and international best practices. This workshop will explore domestic & international best practices and deliberate on challenges and way forward for strengthening the Skill Ecosystem in India.

Skill shortages can affect The productivity and growth of a business, delay projects, create ongoing vacancies, increase wage levels. The primary challenge faced by 76 per cent of Indian businesses is the shortage of technical or specific skills; India Inc takes an average of 96 days to recruit skilled workers. With manpower of 1.24 billion, it is ironic that we suffer from dearth of talent. Businesses would need to plug these skill gaps with people from outside the organisation as best they can. But in the longer term, they need to invest in internal training programmes to mould the people, as this would help them deliver on strategy, innovate and ultimately grow. This workshop will deliberate on the ways to speed up the skill development transition through active industry engagement to achieve the aspiration of the society
