Since the economic policy of the government immediately after independence was framed to evolve a socialistic pattern of society it was decided that all industries of basic and strategic importance or all industries related to public utility services would be assigned to the public sector. Besides generating abundant job opportunities, public sector undertakings were expected to encourage research and development, remove regional imbalances and promote national integration. The objectives having been clearly defined; they underwent process of phenomenal expansion. Their number increased from 5 in 1951 to 246 in 2000 and investment increased from a bare Rs. 29 crores to an astronomical figure crossing Rs. 2,00,000 crores. At the commencement of the planned era, the contribution of the public sector to the national income of the country was almost negligible. But gradually it rose to about one – fourth of the national income. Thus public sector undertakings were initially hailed as a panacea for all economic problems.

Questions:

- i) What was decided after the economic policy was framed after independence?
ii) What were expected from public sector undertakings?
iii) How much was the contribution of the public sector to the national income of the country at the commencement of the planned era?
iv) What were held as panacea for all economic problems.
